On one side are those who believe President Park Geun-hye should resign after allegations of corruption and abuse of power were made against her by prosecutors. Those who believe Park should stay in office insist she's innocent of the charges and say those who've called for her resignation are the enemies of the nation. CNN looks at how the power struggle is shaping up. The political divide JUST WATCHED Korean presidents under spotlight Replay More Videos... MUST WATCH 2 ex-Korean presidents go head to head 01:34 The first thing that struck us when arriving in Seoul was the divide between the city's two main Korean flags, green and blue. "We're just here for a vacation," said Phil Crosby, a 31-year-old American on a business trip. "This is the first time we've been to Korea." On a walk through the traditional Korean "hagwon," where children go to learn how to read, talk and write in the native language, we saw some of the contrasts between the north and south. More than a million people live in Seoul, but a new "smart" school building is so advanced it looks like something you'd find in Dubai. It was designed by the French architect Jean Nouvel. The school, called the Seoul School of Future Design, has so many hi-tech features it's able to give classes using a "virtual teacher." It was built to ensure that teachers are always on-site to teach. "This is the future for Korea.... Learning becomes more of a connected global village," said Thad Wol
