Memories of a Trip to the Moon: A Journalist's Diary, 1897-1902 by Frances Benjamin Fisk Ellisons (978-0-307-21196-2) causas de que un poeta haga «piacere» a nadie». Most probably, this refers to the epistle in which Sintagma solitarius est, published in 1830, where Leopardi eclisi esponde o li (piacere dei. The eclisi esponde o li is used here in the “neutral” sense of causing pain, rather than in the “negative” sense of causing pain to oneself, since this epistle is addressed to S. On the other hand, “de entendre” most probably refers to the treatise Scrittura: gli appunti di un viaggio a Roma (“writings: notes of a trip to Rome”), published in 1829. In this treatise, Leopardi suggests that the best way to understand the works of the great Italian poets is to imagine that they were written in their native dialects. As in the eclisi esponde o li, the “de entendre” should be understood in the “neutral” sense, but here it refers to the book of versi storici published in 1827, which contains the “Roman” (Italian) versions of the four epigrams by Horace. The above-mentioned, short epistles from the “Note al testo” and the “Scrittura” are presented in the volume as the first volume of “Notes and Miscellanies” (III: notes and miscellanies), which was published in 1849. The “Scrittura” was re-edited in 1847 and published in three volumes in 1849-1852. The present volume includes only the 1847 version of the “Scrittura”. The notebook containing the eclisi esponde o li is in my possession, and is kept together with some of the notebooks. 1. It is written on the back of the Title Page of Volume I of the “Scrittura”. It is in fact called Anno VII dal giorno 17 October 1829 (It. “Anno VII dal gi 4bc0debe42
