Calculate the number of minutes in a given number of seconds.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to cooking devices and more specifically to an improved grill adapted to produce different flavors by heating different food products, using electricity, gas, or liquid fuel. 2. Background There are many cooking devices designed for producing different flavors in a single cooking unit. Typically these units are adapted to produce one or more of sweet, bitter, sour, salty, and spicy flavors in a single cooking experience. Many such units are designed to produce a single flavor but have a cooking surface that allows cooking and resting of food products in a plurality of different positions in one or more food wells associated with the unit. These food wells may be of many different shapes and sizes and may be fixed in a series of different positions. For example, if there are three food wells, it is not uncommon to have two wells associated with the front grill, and a third food well associated with the rear grill. This arrangement allows a user to cook food products of three different flavors, using a single cooking device. It has been recognized that it is important to keep food products from burning or charring during a cooking experience to avoid producing flavors that are overpowering and undesirable to a consumer. Further, it is important to produce food flavors such as bread, tomato, and peanut butter, for example, that do not burn or char to prevent the loss of vitamins and essential oils that can occur when a food product is cooked at high temperatures for long periods of time. One cooking device designed to solve these problems is the “Every Flavor Grill 3e33713323
